91. Discuss the scope of the current criminal justice system.

ANSWER: The contemporary criminal justice system costs $264 billion annually. Local governments fund about half of this amount. There are 1.1 million people employed at all levels of law enforcement. More than 11 million people are arrested each year. Ninety-six million cases are heard annually in state courts, including 20 million criminal matters and 2 million juvenile matters. Seven million people are under some form of correctional supervision; more than 2 million individuals are in jails/prisons.

92. Explain why Herbert Packer describes the criminal justice process as an assembly line.

ANSWER: Herbert Packer sees each stage of criminal justice process as a decision point through which cases flow. The concept of the assembly line comes from the fact that although there are many people who commit crime and are arrested and charged, only about 21 adults are incarcerated for every 1000 serious crimes committed. Additionally, 80 percent of all felony cases and over 90 percent of misdemeanors are settled without trial.

93. Compare and contrast two of the perspectives on justice. Which perspective would you advocate, and why?

ANSWER: The rehabilitation perspective sees the justice system as a means of caring for and treating people who cannot manage themselves. It assumes that people are at the mercy of social, economic, and interpersonal conditions and interactions and argues that government programs can help reduce crime at both a societal and individual level. The restorative justice perspective may follow similar views in relation to the rehabilitation perspective but instead of fixing the individual the restorative justice perspective argues that the true purpose of the criminal justice system is to promote a peaceful and just society by resolving conflict between criminal and victim, which should take place in the community in which it originated. The goal is to enable the offender to appreciate the damage, make amends, and be reintegrated back into society. Often times this may not occur until rehabilitation has occurred. The crime control perspective argues that the proper role of the justice system is to prevent crime through judicious use of criminal sanctions. This perspective questions the criminal justice system's ability to rehabilitate offenders and argues that legal technicalities should not help the guilty go free. On the other hand, due process proponents argue that the greatest concern of the justice system should be providing fair and equitable treatment to those accused of crime. Its advocates believe that legal principle of fairness and due process must be upheld. They also point out that the justice system needs to remain an adversarial process. The nonintervention perspective emphasizes the least intrusive treatment possible, including decarceration, diversion, and decriminalization. The equal justice perspective suggests that all people should be treated equally before the law, which is best achieved through individual discretion.

94. Explain how the formal criminal justice system differs from the informal criminal justice system. What factors in the formal system of criminal justice impact and influence the informal criminal justice system?

ANSWER: Few cases are actually processed through the entire formal system. A comprehensive view of formal criminal process normally includes but is not limited to the following:

1. Initial contact
2. Investigation
3. Arrest
4. Custody
5. Charging
6. Preliminary hearing/grand jury
7. Arraignment
8. Bail/detention
9. Plea bargaining
10. Trial/adjudication
11. Sentencing/disposition
12. Appeal/post-conviction remedies
13. Correctional treatment
14. Release
15. Post-release

The informal system is used much more often than the formal system as many cases are settled in an informal pattern of cooperation between the major actors in the justice process. Upwards of 80 percent of all felony cases and over 90 percent of misdemeanors are settled without trial.

95. Discuss how the criminal justice assembly line results in the concept of a “criminal justice funnel.” What are the potential consequences of this model on society?

ANSWER: The attempt to describe the criminal justice as an assembly line as funnel is appropriate. Although crime has declined in recent years, more than 11 million people are arrested each year. It is massive undertaking to process, treat, and care for millions of people. In actual practice, many suspects are released before trial because of procedural error, problems with evidence, and dismissal by the prosecutor; thus justice can be viewed as funnel that holds many cases in the beginning but dwindles to relatively few cases at its end.

96. The “wedding cake” model is an alternative to the traditional criminal justice flowchart. Using specific examples, elaborate the “wedding cake” model. Address how society and the justice system respond to crimes committed at each level.

ANSWER: Samuel Walker describes the informal criminal justice process as a four-layer cake. Level I involves celebrated cases such as Jared Lee Loughner, who has been accused of shooting congresswoman Gabrielle Giffords, and the Casey Anthony murder trial and her acquittal. Level II involves serious felonies that include rape and robbery. Level III involves less serious felonies, offenses committed by young or first-time offenders, or involves offenders known to one another such as domestic violence. Level IV involves misdemeanors such as shoplifting, public drunkenness, minor assault. Examples will vary by student.

97. Compare the crime control perspective of criminal justice to the due process perspective of criminal justice. How do these two perspectives differ and why? Elaborate how the use of one of the alternate perspectives on justice might change society’s view on crime and criminals.

This perspective questions the criminal justice system’s ability to rehabilitate offenders and argues that legal technicalities should not help the guilty go free. 99. Discuss the role of ethics in the monitoring of sexual offenders from the perspective of two different personnel in the criminal justice system (police officer, corrections officer, defense attorney, prosecutor, etc.).

ANSWER: Sex offender laws are now used in all states and at the federal level and appeal to a political platform of ensuring that neighborhoods remain safe as well as appeasing the public’s desire to “do something” about offenders that live among us. For police officers, ethical behavior is particularly important in law enforcement because they have authority to deprive people of liberty. The role of monitoring sex offenders does not traditionally impact officers until a violation or suspected violation has occurred. Police officers strive to maintain considerable discretion over who to investigate, how the investigation should go, and how much effort is required. Monitoring sex offenders may be one of the more difficult challenges for correctional officers despite the fact that they do not handle the traditional monitoring of sex offenders living in the community but rather while they are incarcerated. As sex offenders are often targets of victimization in prison and jail, ethics are challenged by the discretion afforded to correctional workers and administrators.

100. Why are ethics important in criminal justice? Choose a component of the justice system and discuss ethical issues of importance.

ANSWER: Ethics today is an especially important topic considering the power granted to those in control. Without ethical decision making, individual civil rights or personal liberties may suffer. Moral ambiguity is often the norm in the environment of justice system personnel. Ethics is especially important when considering the court process and the defense attorney who is often confronted with conflicting obligations to his or her client and profession. Additionally, the prosecutor may become tested when dual role of prosecutor causes him or her to experience role conflict. Response will vary for each student.
