8. What is the most important element in a control environment?
- Management's communication
 - Management's role and example
 - The hiring process
 - The internal audit department

ANSWER: b

RATIONALE:

- Incorrect. Although management communication is critical, it is not the most important element in the control environment.
- Correct. The most important element in establishing an appropriate internal control environment is management's role and example, because employees will follow what management does more than what management communicates.
- Incorrect. The hiring process, although critical, cannot eliminate all fraud. Hiring only those with integrity can still lead to fraud if the example and role of management pushes employees into believing that fraud is okay. Also, the hiring process cannot screen out all dishonest employees.
- Incorrect. Internal auditors only detect about 20% of employee fraud. While internal auditors do add a deterrent effect, they are not the most critical element in the control environment.
