ESSAY

36. How do successful business leaders respond to the changing business environment?

ANS:

Businesses and their leaders do not operate in isolation. They are part of a much larger ecosystem that is constantly changing and evolving. Successful business leaders not only respond to changes in the global business environment but also try to influence it. Some leaders focus their efforts on lobbying to influence the government's role in business. Other leaders identify growing market niches or target consumer segments and develop products or services to fill specific needs. Still other leaders invest in research and development to commercialize technological innovations. In these ways, business leaders take a proactive stance in not just reacting to but also managing their environment and adapting their strategies accordingly.

37. Explain the features of the European Union.

ANS:

The European Union traces its roots back to the 1950s, when Europeans were searching for a way to promote political and economic stability in their region. The organization was originally known as the European Coal and Steel Community, which sought to reduce trade barriers in coal and steel trading. The organization eventually developed into its current form in 1993 with the signing of the Maastricht Treaty, which established the legal framework for the EU. The formation of the EU created a single market by a system of laws that apply in all member states, guaranteeing the freedom of movement of people, goods, services, and capital. In 1999, the EU introduced a common currency, the euro, which has been adopted by 17 member states of the eurozone, which is an economic union of 27 of Europe's major economic states. The single European currency replaced numerous national currencies and unified a common marketplace, which created a competitive economy on par with the United States. The euro was designed to help build the single market by, for example, easing travel of citizens and goods, eliminating exchange rate problems, providing price transparency, creating a single financial market, and supporting price stability and low interest rates.

38. Briefly describe the different dimensions of the general environment.

ANS:

The general environment includes the technological, economic, political/legal, and socio-cultural dimensions that affect a firm's external environment.

The technological dimension of the general environment refers to the processes, technologies, or systems that a firm can use to produce outputs.

The economic dimension of a firm's environment often includes inflation, unemployment, consumer sentiment, and interest rates of all the countries where it sells its products and services.

The political dimension of the external environment refers to the political events and activities in a market that affect a firm. The legal dimension refers to the regulations and laws that a firm encounters in its markets.

The socio-cultural dimension of the external environment refers to demographic characteristics as well as to the values and customs of a society.

39. Define task environment and its dimensions.

ANS:

The task environment includes entities that directly affect a firm on a constant basis and include competitors, suppliers, and customers. A competitor of a firm is any organization that creates goods or services targeted at a similar group of customers. A supplier provides resources or services for a firm to help in its creation of products and services. The customers of a firm are the people or other organizations that buy the firm's products and services.

40. Outline the components of a firm's internal environment.

ANS:

A firm's internal environment consists of several dimensions that affect the firm from within its boundaries. The typical components of a firm's internal environment include owners, the board of directors, employees, and culture. Each of these dimensions can directly impact a firm's performance and competitive position. The owners of a firm are the people or institutions that maintain legal control of the organization. The board of directors is a group of individuals elected by the shareholders and charged with overseeing the general direction of the firm. A firm's employees are an extremely important component of a firm's internal environment. The firm's employees are the people who make the products and provide the services that allow the firm to exist. Culture is a pattern of basic assumptions about the way an organization should work and the manner in which individuals in an organization should interact with each other.
