20) What is personality? Is it possible for an individual to have "no personality"? Explain.

Answer: Personality is the relatively stable set of psychological characteristics that influences the way an individual interacts with his or her environment. As a result, everyone must have a personality. The expression "no personality" is often directed towards individuals who are low on a personality dimension such as extraversion or agreeableness.

Skill: Recall

Objective: 2.1 Define personality and describe the dispositional, situational, and interactionist approaches to organizational behaviour.

21) What is trait activation theory and what does it tell us about the role that personality plays in organizational behaviour?

Answer: According to trait activation theory, traits lead to certain behaviours only when the situation makes the need for the trait salient. This tells us that personality will only be important in situations that call for a particular personality trait. In situations where the personality trait is not important it will not be a factor in terms of a person's behaviour. Thus, personality characteristics influence people's behaviour when the situation calls for a particular personality characteristic. This also means that there is no one best personality trait; it depends on the situation.

Objective: 2.1 Define personality and describe the dispositional, situational, and interactionist approaches to organizational behaviour.

22) What are the implications of trait activation theory for a manager who has to assign employees to various tasks in different situations? How should the manager proceed and what will be most effective?

Answer: According to trait activation theory, traits lead to certain behaviours only when the situation makes the need for the trait salient. Thus, personality characteristics influence people's behaviour when the situation calls for a particular personality characteristic. This means that a manager must understand each employee in terms of their personality traits and assign them to tasks that call for their personality traits. For example, if a task requires an employee to interact with others and to be sociable and talkative, it would be best to assign an employee who is high on extraversion since this will be important for the employee's behaviour and success rather than, say, an employee who is high on openness to experience. The point is to match the employee to the task with an understanding that the employee has a personality trait that will lead to behaviours that are necessary to be effective in task performance. As described in the text, the key concept here is fit: putting the right person in the right job, group, or organization.

60) Of the "Big Five" personality dimensions, which three do you feel are the most important in order to be effective as a sales representative?

Answer: It is likely that all five play a role in the success of a sales representative. The three that are most likely to help an individual be successful are extraversion, agreeableness, and conscientiousness. Extraversion is important because most sales roles involve breaking some new ground and creating new customer relationships on a continual basis. Agreeableness is important because of the need to build relationships over time and to foster social connections. A high degree of conscientiousness helps ensure that the sales representative works effectively and diligently and is thorough when serving customers.

61) What are the "Big Five" dimensions of personality? Give two examples of research from the text which link these dimensions to workplace behaviours.

Answer: Extraversion, emotional stability, agreeableness, conscientiousness, and openness to experience. There are several examples of research on pages 43-44 in the text, which link these dimensions to workplace behaviours. One study suggests that extraversion was important for managers and salespeople, while another one found that extraversion was positively correlated with absenteeism.

63) Distinguish between self-esteem and self-efficacy. Is it possible for an individual to have high self-esteem but low self-efficacy? Explain your answer.

Answer: Self-esteem is the degree to which a person has an overall positive self-evaluation; self-efficacy refers to the beliefs which people have about their ability to successfully perform a specific task. It is clearly possible for an individual to have high self-esteem and also have low self-efficacy with respect to a specific task. For example, someone who has a favourable self-image may also acknowledge that they are not very good at playing golf.

17) Define learning and describe what people learn in organizations.

Answer: Learning occurs when practice or experience leads to a relatively permanent change in behaviour potential. The words practice or experience rule out viewing behavioural changes caused by factors like drug intake or biological maturation as learning. The "what" aspect of learning can be described as learning content, of which there are four primary categories: practical skills, intrapersonal skills, interpersonal skills, and cultural awareness. Practical skills include job-specific skills, knowledge, and technical competence. Intrapersonal skills are skills such as problem solving, critical thinking, learning about alternative work processes, and risk taking. Interpersonal skills include interactive skills such as communicating, teamwork, and conflict resolution. Finally, cultural awareness involves learning the social norms of organizations and understanding company goals, business operations, and company expectations and priorities.

57) What advice would you give to a manager about the effective use of punishment in the workplace?

Answer: Punishment can be an effective means for stopping undesirable behaviour, but it must be applied very carefully. When using punishment, managers should provide correct alternative responses, limit the emotions involved, ensure that the punishment is truly aversive, punish immediately when possible, avoid the rewarding of unwanted behaviours, and try not to inadvertently punish undesirable behaviours.

33) What is self-regulation and how can it be used by a manager to improve safety among his/her employees in the workplace? Be sure to describe self-regulation techniques and how they should be used by employees to improve safety.

Answer: Self-regulation refers to the use of learning principles to regulate one's own behaviour. A manager can teach employees how to use self-regulation to manage their own behaviour and to learn and engage in safe working practices and behaviours. Self-regulation techniques include collecting self-observation data; observing models; setting goals; rehearsing; and reinforcing oneself. These techniques can be taught to employees with respect to specific safe working practices and behaviours—employees observe their own behaviour, observe others engaging in safe working behaviours, set goals for their own safe working behaviour, practise the safe working behaviours, and reward themselves for performing the safe working behaviours.

27) What should a formal employee recognition program specify in order to be effective? Give an example for improving work attendance.

Answer: a) how a person will be recognized, b) the type of behaviour being encouraged, c) the manner of public acknowledgement, and d) a token or icon of the event for the recipient. The example for work attendance can be found in the text on page 59. Employees with perfect attendance for an entire month had their names posted with a gold star for that month. At the end of each quarter, employees with no more than two absences received a personal card notifying and congratulating them. At the end of the year there was a plant-wide meeting to recognize good attendance and small, engraved mementos were awarded to employees who had perfect attendance during the entire year.

29) Is it unethical for managers to use reinforcement strategies to control the behaviour of workers? Be sure to consider the use of organizational behaviour modification and to defend your answer.

Answer: This is an opinion question which forces students to consider the positive and negative aspects of organization behaviour modification. Most would agree that managers control the behaviour of workers anyway, so it may be beneficial for them to learn about the effective use of reinforcement strategies. For example, a manager who learns to use positive reinforcement techniques instead of punishment may also be helping his workers achieve higher levels of job satisfaction.

30) What is behaviour modelling training and what are the steps involved?

Answer: BMT is a training method based on the modelling component of social cognitive theory. It involves the following steps: describe to trainees a set of well-defined behaviours to be learned; provide a model or models displaying the effective use of those behaviours; provide opportunities for trainees to prepare using those behaviours; provide feedback and social reinforcement to trainees following practice; and take steps to maximize the transfer of those behaviours to the job.
