Essay

1. Provide three reasons why studying the history of policing is important.
Ans: First, in order to properly evaluate the modern police, we must have an understanding of how much or how little they have changed over time. Second, we can learn from the mistakes of the past. Studying police history can help identify persistent problems in policing, and where applicable the changes that resolved these problems. Or if the proposed changes did not adequately address the problem, we can avoid repeating this same mistakes. Third, studying the past may help to identify the trends or issues that may become the problems of the future.
Learning Objective: 2-1: Explain why an understanding of police history is important.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Introduction: Why Study the History of the Police?
Difficulty Level: Medium

2. What were slave patrols and what function did they perform.
Ans: Answer may vary. Slave patrols were small groups of men who patrolled a 10 to 12 square mile area. Originally consisting of White landowners, the patrols would eventually be largely manned by of nonland owners who were paid to serve in this role. Their duties including catching runaway slaves as well as monitoring the activities of slaves. In this capacity, they ensured slaves had passes when away from the plantations, prevented them from meeting for illegal religious gatherings, and searched slave quarters for any signs of contraband, including books, paper, pens, and so on.
Learning Objective: 2-3: Discuss the role of constables, watches, slave patrols, and sheriffs during the pre-police era.

3. What three major developments led to the creation of the first professional police departments in the United States?
Ans: The creation of professional police departments in the United States was due to the Industrial Revolution, the creation of major cities, and the abolishment of slavery.
Learning Objective: 2-2: Identify and discuss the four eras of policing and the reasons why each era began and dissolved.
Cognitive Domain: Comprehension
Answer Location: The First American Police Departments: The Political Era of Policing
Difficulty Level: Medium

4. What role did the industrial revolution play in the creation of professional police departments?

Ans: Answer may vary. The industrial revolution changed the United States from an agrarian economy to one that focused on the production of goods. As more people moved to cities in search of work, the population of cities grew tremendously and so too did the amount of crime in the new industrial cities. As living conditions were often poor, many cities experienced riots. As the "watch" was largely ineffective at controlling violence and crime, professional police departments were formed.
Learning Objective: 2-2: Identify and discuss the four eras of policing and the reasons why each era began and dissolved.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: The Industrial Revolution and the Creation of Cities
Difficulty Level: Hard

5. Explain what role "black codes" played in the oppression of Blacks in the post-Civil War era.
Ans: Answer may vary. In the post-Civil War era, black codes were used as a way to limit the rights of Blacks in the southern states. While these codes were allegedly designed to articulate the rights and responsibilities of black citizens, it effectively limited their freedoms.
Learning Objective: 2-3: Discuss the role of constables, watches, slave patrols, and sheriffs during the pre-police era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: The Abolishment of Slavery
Difficulty Level: Medium

6. Describe the political era of policing?
Ans: The political era of policing took place from the mid-1800s to the early-1900s. During this period, selection and promotion of police officers were tied almost exclusively to political affiliation. As a result, police officers had little experience or training, and police corruption was rampant.
Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: The Political Era of Policing
Difficulty Level: Medium

7. Explain the role of Black police officers during the political era of policing.
Ans: Initially, many police departments employed Black policemen, although their duties usually differed from that of White officers. Black officers were frequently assigned to Black neighborhoods and, in some instances, prohibited from taking action against white citizens. Once the Supreme Court of the United States found the Civil Rights Act of 1975 to be unconstitutional in 1883, many Black officers lost their jobs.
Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Diversity in the Political Era of Policing
Difficulty Level: Medium

8. Assess the effectiveness of police patrol during the political era of policing.
Ans: Answer may vary. During the political era of policing, police departments were better staffed and operated 24 hr a day, however, their they were largely ineffective when it came to patrol. Patrol was primarily done on foot, and in larger cities, many areas were not patrolled at all. In addition, lack of effective means of communication between citizens and the police, and between the police themselves, greatly hindered the ability of the police to operate.
Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Application
Answer Location: The Role of the Police During the Political Era
Difficulty Level: Hard

9. Explain and provide examples of the "third degree."
Ans: Answer may vary. The third degree was the use of force by police to induce suspects to provide information during interrogations. Methods employed varied but included beatings with a rubber hose, batons, or other implements; placing the suspect in a sweat box; drilling teeth; and burning with cigarettes or cigars. The practice was banned in 1936 as a result of the Supreme Court decision in Brown v. Mississippi.

Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Criminal Investigations During the Political Era
Difficulty Level: Medium

10. Explain how technology changed the way police officers operated during the reform era of policing.
Ans: Answer may vary. During the political era of policing, officers were limited in their ability to effectively perform due to technological limitations. This changed significantly during the reform era of policing. Automobiles allowed officers to more effectively patrol and increased response time. Two-way radios allowed supervisors to remain in constant contact with officers, and the telephone allowed citizens to contact police at any time.
Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Application
Answer Location: Reform as Anti-Politics
Difficulty Level: Medium

11. Explain the role and extent of diversity in police departments during the reform era.
Ans: Answer may vary. During the reform era, attempts were made to diversify the police force to make it more representational of society as a whole. While the number of female and minority officers increased within most police departments during the reform era, the numbers were still disproportionate, especially in many larger cities. In addition, women were still largely tasked with performing duties that restricted them to dealing with female or juvenile offenders, and thus not treated as equals to their male colleagues.
Learning Objective: 2-5: Compare how the reform era of policing differed from the political era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: The Reform Era and (Lack of) Diversity in Police Departments
Difficulty Level: Hard

12. Explain the reasons why the 1960s led to a crisis in policing.
Ans: Answer may vary. A number of things happened during the 1960s that made it a particularly difficult one for the police and which lead to a crisis in policing. Between 1960 and 1970 crime rates doubled, which not surprisingly made many question the effectiveness of police. In addition, the police often found themselves squaring off against those advocating for social change as part of the civil rights movement and those who were against the war in Vietnam. These often violent clashes would further divide minority communities and the police. Finally, research studies showed that many of the most basic police operations were largely ineffective, including routine patrol, use of detectives, and rapid response.
Learning Objective: 2-6: Discuss why the 1960s were so significant for the police.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Then the 1960s Happened
Difficulty Level: Medium

13. What is "broken windows theory?"
Ans: Broken windows theory was introduced by James Q. Wilson and George Kelling. The theory argues that disorder leads to fear of crime which keeps people from interacting with and caring about each other. Criminals then perceive the chances of apprehension in these areas as minimal and choose to engage in criminal activity. By focusing on low-level crimes like public drunkenness, vandalism, and drug abuse, the police can prevent more serious crime and change attitudes regarding fear of crime.
Learning Objective: 2-7: Evaluate the critical concepts associated with the community problem-solving era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Community and Problem-Oriented Policing
Difficulty Level: Medium

14. Explain the concept of community-oriented policing.

Ans: Answer may vary. Community-oriented policing has taken many forms, but the key idea is the notion that the police institute policies and practices that involve citizens in policing. The goal is to have the police and community work together to "coproduce" crime prevention. Cooperation is critical, and the gap between the police and the community must be bridged. This can be done by patrolling on foot, bicycle, or horse; by starting a neighborhood watch program; or by hosting community meetings. By working with the community, the police are in a better position to reduce crime and fear of crime.
Learning Objective: 2-7: Evaluate the critical concepts associated with the community problem-solving era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Community and Problem-Oriented Policing
Difficulty Level: Hard

15. Explain the concept of problem-oriented policing.
Ans: Similar to community-oriented policing, problem-oriented policing seeks to redefine the traditional way in which the police operate and to transform the police from an "incident driven" orientation to a "problem-oriented" orientation. This concept was introduced by Herman Goldstein and advocated for working with the community to identify issues that are of the most concern to them and to work with the community to resolve these issues.
Learning Objective: 2-7: Evaluate the critical concepts associated with the community problem-solving era.
Cognitive Domain: Analysis
Answer Location: Community and Problem-Oriented Policing
Difficulty Level: Hard
